Automation is not the end of the world. Here's why

For many people worldwide, the answer is unemployment. Work is not just what allows us to sustain ourselves and our families: it expands our possibilities to be and do what we aspire to; it gives meaning and rhythm to our endeavours as part of a broader social contract. This is why in times of "polycrisis" and broader economic transformations, we dread losing what we hold so dear to a presumed automation apocalypse. More on the latest WEF study is available here
